Weedon Island Preserve is located along the shores of Old Tampa Bay. This coastal system, comprised of aquatic and upland ecosystems, is home to numerous species of flora and fauna, an outstanding environmental education facility and a rich cultural history. Come experience Weedon Island Preserve Cultural and Natural History Center.

Understanding the natural and cultural history of the preserve empowers citizens to make informed decisions about the environment and demonstrates how people and the natural world shape each other. The center offers this opportunity through interpretive tours and hikes, programs, exhibits, presentations and workshops, and other events.

Completed in 2002, the center blends the past and present into a truly exciting experience. The Native American and early European history of the preserve is fascinating and helped shape the preserve as we know it today. Come explore the center's exhibits and learn how we still depend on the Tampa Bay estuary through workshops and presentations.

Weedon Island Preserve's mission is to balance ecological and cultural conservation and protection with the passive recreational needs of the public. Approximately 3,200 acres managed by the Pinellas County Parks and Conservation Resources department, the preserve is a mosaic of rich mangrove forests, open mud flats and saltmarches, pine/scrubby flatwoods and maritime hammocks. Enjoy the many natural wonders rich with wading and water birds, native plants and state listed species like the gopher tortoise.

The preserve has a long and colorful history with many changes. It was once home to prehistoric people ("Weeden" Island culture), a movie studio, an airport, a speakeasy and private residences. Land speculators came and went and trash was dumped and cleaned up. What remains today is the direct result of a long-term commitment by volunteers, citizens, industry and governments to protect this land for its ecological and cultural richness.

In July 1972, Weedon Island was placed on the National Register of Historic Places. It officially opened as Weedon Island State Preserve in 1980. In 1993, the state and county entered into a lease agreement bringing the management of the preserve under the direction of Pinellas County.
